

Love Essay

According to certain ancient Greek scholars, there are four types of love:

- Storgē, which is the love among people whom are brought together by chance and which is based on familiarity
- Philía, which is the love among friends and certain family members that is based on mutual admiration and choice
- Éros, which is romantic, sexual love
- Agápe, which is the spiritual, selfless love of fellow man. It is a powerful love that involves sacrifice and the transcendence of the boundaries that typically separate people

Write a 600+-word, non-fiction narrative about a time when someone you know demonstrated agápe toward someone else. Make sure to include in your narrative all the basic elements of a narrative:

- Set-up, which is the detailed description of the setting and characters before anything happens
- Rising Action, which is when the first occurrence happens
- Climax, which is when the most significant occurrence happens
- Denouement, which is when the complexities are unraveled and everything becomes more clear

Your final draft should be typed in MLA format and e-mailed as an attachment (not printed) to:

loveessay@webstacourse.com no later than Friday, May 27, 2011 8 AM

Love Essay

According to certain ancient Greek scholars, there are four types of love:

- Storgē, which is the love among people whom are brought together by chance and which is based on familiarity
- Philía, which is the love among friends and certain family members that is based on mutual admiration and choice
- Éros, which is romantic, sexual love
- Agápe, which is the spiritual, selfless love of fellow man. It is a powerful love that involves sacrifice and the transcendence of the boundaries that typically separate people

Write a 600+-word, non-fiction narrative about a time when someone you know demonstrated agápe toward someone else. Make sure to include in your narrative all the basic elements of a narrative:

- Set-up, which is the detailed description of the setting and characters before anything happens
- Rising Action, which is when the first occurrence happens
- Climax, which is when the most significant occurrence happens
- Denouement, which is when the complexities are unraveled and everything becomes more clear

Your final draft should be typed in MLA format and e-mailed as an attachment (not printed) to:

loveessay@webstacourse.com no later than Friday, May 27, 2011 8 AM